

4 Good Reasons that PHC Prep Outshines a Community College Experience

Why not just put your teen in a community college course? Here are four good reasons...

1. Time. Driving back and forth wastes time that you can be using somewhere else—especially if your student doesn't drive yet, and it takes your time.

2. Safety. Answer this: Do you really want your teen to be surrounded by college kids on a campus right now? Even if your teen can “handle it,” there are going to be rough times that may or may not be healthy for your teen. Immorality, bad behavior, and pressures are by no means limited to the college or university campus—but they are there. True, you can't “protect your student forever”...but is the time really right? Only you know. As parents, we'd hate to find out later that we made a wrong choice.

3. Content. Here, you get to see all the content of the course, and hear every lecture, if you'd like. At the community college, you see and hear nothing before, during, and often after it's taught. Most importantly...

4. Christian worldview. You can be assured that everything here taught is filtered through a clear Christ-focus—so that your teen can discern truth now. In fact, what we're learning is constantly held up to the Christian truths—so that your teen can clearly articulate how his or her faith works into all knowledge.

Statistics show that “around 80% of students who enter college as a Christian will leave college having lost their faith. That's four out of five.”¹ Eighty percent is a huge number. And it happens to strong Christians, from strong Christian families.

We can gain the whole world—but if we lose our own souls, what good is it? Likewise, our teen can learn from a community college course—but if he or she loses his or her faith, is it worth the loss?

PHC Prep Academy is one way to ensure that your teen grows his or her faith—and does not lose it.

¹ Don't Lose Faith, <http://www.dontlosefaith.info/about-us/> (accessed April 14, 2011).